STOP SHIPMENT OF CLOTH TO ALL UPPER END TOWNS

Branch Storage Company
Places Large Signs On Trucks

"NO MATERIAL INSIDE"

Factories Now Working On Greatly Reduced Schedules

PERKASIE, Aug. 16.—Working under considerable reduced schedules the clothing factories in upper Bucks County continue to remain open and are working on material that is shipped in by freight and express companies. The Branch Storage Company has been virtually forced by the New York strikers in the clothing trade to stop hauling material from New York to the Upper North Penn factories.

Much excitement was caused yesterday by the burning of the factory of a newly-established clothing company at Bangor. Residents and manufacturers here are on edge and apparently are justified in keeping the heavy guard at the plants as well as the full electric light plant.

On Saturday afternoon, the clothing manufacturers, borough officials, and the managers and employees of the Branch Storage Company held a meeting behind locked doors in the Perkaskie fire hall, where they remained closeted from 2 o'clock in the afternoon until 7.30 in the evening.

Just what was taken up at this lengthy meeting, and whether or not a new plan for combatting the strikers and racketeers was worked out, is not known. Only those personally concerned with the situation were admitted to the meeting, and all were instructed to keep secret what transpired there.

Shortly after the meeting was brought to a close, the Branch officials came out with their first public statement, and said that the trucking concern "will not haul any clothing at the present time."

Large signs have been painted and hung on the sides of the trucks, which advertise the fact that no clothing material is within, and the first of these left Perkaskie last night, bound for New York.

The two factories that closed up over the week-end, with the promise of reopening, went to work yesterday morning, on schedule, but not working on the large quantities of material ordinarily available. The railroads are now bringing virtually all the material into Perkaskie that is being used to keep the factories open.

The last truck to go to New York was driven by Harvey Kline, of Perkaskie, who went through some harrowing experiences before he got back to town.

He tells of driving the truck through a mob of 1,000 men, bombarded with bricks, bottles and missiles of all kinds. They backed up the truck at the loading platform, but the situation became too hot, and police suggested that they keep moving, to avoid serious trouble.

The truck was driven away, but in the excitement, Kline was left behind. He says that he was in the storage house for four hours before he dared to venture out, and finally escaped by leaving from another part of the building.

A former member of the New York City riot squad spent the week-end in Perkaskie, giving Chief of Police James Schatz some pointers on how to dispose of his men and take care of any situation that might arise.

By Joseph A. Loftus

I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
HARRISBURG, Aug. 16.—(INS)—A one per cent general sales tax bill was selected today to run the gamut of a House vote and legislative leaders pinned virtually all hope of success upon it.

With the economy mainspring passed, the new sales measure was started on its way with the good wishes of organization and group spokesmen who hailed it as the solution of the Assembly's problem of financing the $12,000,000 Talbot relief bill.

Possibility of enacting a revenue-raiser appeared brighter than at any time during the session. Gov. Gifford Pinchot and House and Senate leaders met in conference on the sales tax legislation and following the meeting (Continued on Page 3)

GAME IS PLENTIFUL

(In this third of four articles on the life of a prospector in modern Alaska, Clarence Jackson Lincke describes his first jaunt with a dog team into the Alaskan wilderness in search of gold.)

By Clarence Jackson Lincke

I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
SEWARD, Alaska, Aug. 16.—(INS)—The last jumping-off place of the prospector leaving civilization for the wilderness is the trading post, on the railroad.

If there is travel over the trail or road leading in the direction I am going, I will start as soon as the ice in the rivers will permit of crossing without breaking through. I did this once with a sledload of grub on top of me. It was 6 degrees below zero. I was in the water six minutes to my neck. But I saved the grub and prevented the dogs from being dragged beneath the ice, leaving me 50 miles from succor save what I had in the little tent pitched upon six feet of snow.

The first thaw in winter comes in January. This is followed a month later by another. The thawing snow creates a crust sufficient to bear the weight of man, sled and dogs. No need to wear snowshoes.

The dogs are eager to go, in welcome of escape from the tedium of being chained to their kennels. The first load contains the tent, stove, cooking utensils and a moderate supply of emergency food.

Two types of sleds are used, the Yukon—without handlebars, and the basket sled, with handle-bars and brake in the rear. Both are provided with "Gee-pole"—a sort of bowsprit, extending out front, two inches in diameter and about eight feet long, attached to the right-hand side of the sled. On the first trip, unless someone is on the rear runners to manipulate the brake and hold the dogs the man on the "Gee-pole" must match the dogs in speed. It is his part to guide the sled on the narrow ribbon of congealed snow and prevent upset on equalities of the trail.

Bristol Tennis Stars Pass First
Tests in Trenton
Event

THEY DROP ONE SET

Those two Bristol boys, Herbert Lawrence and Nelson Green, are again matching their skill against the Trenton group of tennis stars in Trenton men's doubles championship. They passed the first-round tests last night. Other Bucks Countians to make the grade were Norman Swayne, Newtown, and Frank Blank, Langhorne. Abbie Rednor and Harlan Whitehead advanced through the non-appearance of Roger McDonough and partner, while Hennie Irons and Ben Satterthwaite did not take the court for their scheduled engagement with the Y. M. C. A. stars, Hobart Suppers and Paul Rhoades.

Swayne and Blank conquered Davidson and Gould, 6-1, 6-1, while Kotz and Millerick bowed to the strategy of Brearley and Whitehead, 6-4, 6-2. Lawrence and Green dropped a set to Dr. Sam Lavine and Francis Tidd, but won 6-1, 4-6, 6-3.

Chick Bublitz and Steve Kramer, Villa Park champions, ousted Dr. Harold Robinson and Morris Robinson from the tournament, 7-5, 7-5. Two Y. M. C. WERE KNOWN HERE

(By "The Stroller")
Residents of this section read with interest and sorrow of the tragedy which befell Irene Berger, 27-year old acrobat when she died following a fall at Atlantic City, received while doing her act. Her partner, Roxie LaRose, 30, sustained severe and perhaps fatal injuries in the same accident.

Both of these performers were at the Grand Theater here last winter, where they did the same act as they were doing at Atlantic City on Friday. Here at Bristol instead of using the high ladders they did the act from trapezes.

The setting at the Grand was a huge gold bird cage the door of which opened and the two performers went up on the door as birds.

In a way these two performers have close relationship to Bucks County as they spend considerable time near Perkaskie and Quakertown where diving horses are trained.

Son Born This Morning To Anne Lindbergh

By Margaret Lane
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
ENGLEWOOD, N. J., Aug. 16.—Anne Lindbergh gave birth to a son at 7.30 this morning. Mother and child are doing well.

This sudden news was flashed around the world today awaking a flood of renewed sympathy for the bereaved mother of a few months ago, now a mother once more. Lindbergh's son was again in her arms, and thankfulness in her heart that the tragedy of her first child has not robbed her of her second.

The news of the birth was confirmed by Dr. E. M. Hawks, one of the attending physicians.

Dr. Hawks merely announced the birth of a son to Mrs. Lindbergh, and added:

"All other information will have to come from the Lindbergh family."

At the home of Mrs. Dwight W. Morrow, where the baby was born Dr. E. H. Dennen, who assisted Dr. Hawks, also confirmed the news.

Overnight the Lindbergh family has "come back." After months of grief and retirement in their Englewood home, Colonel Lindbergh unexpectedly turned up at Newark airport yesterday, and flew for the first time since he ceased searching for his murdered child. Several hours after he landed Anne Lindbergh gave birth to another son. Lindbergh is in the air again, and there is a baby in the home.

It is believed that the birth was unexpected for if it had been known to be so imminent nothing could have permitted Colonel Lindbergh to leave his wife even for the two hours during which he tried out the new Powell-Wing monoplane. He chatted easily with officials when he came down, showing no signs of anxiety or strain, and almost as soon as the public knew Lindbergh had been seen about, once more, the first real news of him in months, the sudden and far greater news broke. He has his son again.

Rumors ran riot at the time of the kidnapping of the late Charles Augustus Lindbergh, Jr., that birth of the second child was imminent. This was not true of course, but it was widely believed until Mrs. Dwight Morris, as spokesman for the Lindbergh family, officially announced the child would not be born until the end of August or beginning of September.

The trial of the young mother endured then was at a far more dangerous time than if it had been immediately preceding the birth, and her iron self-control was even more heroic.

15 Tons

TO OUTLINE DETOUR

Work has been started on the bridge over the Neshaminy Creek at Bridgeton which is to be reinforced and made safe for modern traffic. The bridge will be closed to traffic beginning August 23rd.

The increased capacity will be obtained by reinforcing the present trusses and floor beams and replacing the wooden deck with the Belmont interlocking floor, which consists of steel channels and non-skid asphalt plank wearing surface.

The detour necessitated by the reconstruction of this bridge has not been mapped out as yet, but will be in the next few days. John S. Roberts, Jr., of Bristol, county commissioner, is in charge of the work.

Five Couples Under Arrest In Raid at Hulmeville

HULMEVILLE, Aug. 16.—Five women were ordered to return to their homes in Philadelphia and five men were placed under arrest yesterday when officers raided a bungalow on the Neshaminy Creek, near here.

Officer Johnson and Constable Morris were telephoned for and the voice said: "They're killing each other in that place." It was a woman's voice which summoned the officers.

The officers hurried to the place and found the occupants engaged in a free-for-all fight. Practically all of the windows were broken as well as most of the furniture, the officers stated.

The men were bleeding profusely and were taken before Justice of the Peace Harry Welsh, where they were arraigned and each fined $10 and costs. Only one of the group, John Brown, 22, of Philadelphia, had money enough to pay his fine. Others were Martin Bradley, Edward Bradley, Vincent Dempsey, John Donahue, all of Philadelphia. They were committed to the Bucks County Jail for 30 days.

Audience Approves Farrell and Gaynor Reel

At the Grand Theatre at the first showing of Charles Farrell and Janet Gaynor in "The First Year," the large audience present was completely captivated by the good humor and true sincere romance that this popular pair displayed. It was an audience that enjoyed every minute of the show. It is full of many good hearty laughs and a very good clean wholesome story of two young persons in the first year of their married life, with their misunderstanding and their human appeal to all.

It is a thoroughly enjoyable picture for all classes and no doubt tonight and tomorrow night there will be large audiences to see this most popular pair on the screen in their very best success.

Charlie Chase in a very funny comedy, entitled "In Walked Charlie" and nine events of the day make a very good surrounding bill.

FRUSTRATE ATTEMPT OF CIRCUS TO EVADE ATTACHMENT WRIT

Camby-Hammer Outfit Leaves
Trenton During Early Morning

CAUGHT, MORRISVILLE

Two Men and Wife of Owner
Are Now Under Arrest

MORRISVILLE, Aug. 16.—Evidently attempting to evade an attachment which had been served upon them at Woodlawn Park, Trenton, N. J., yesterday, the Camby-Hammer Circus came to grief early today in the P. R. R. yards at Morrisville.

The circus which has been showing at Woodlawn Park for the past several days and which exhibited at the Inter-State Fair last year, was served with an attachment yesterday by Sheriff Reichert, Mercer County.

At two o'clock this morning they loaded up their equipment and drove the 12 steers and 20 horses across the free bridge here. John Bishop, the park manager, was informed of the action and at once communicated with State Police here.

Corporal Stewart, Troopers Smith and Dando along with Constable Thompson went in search of the fleeing circus. It has been learned that arrangements had been made to ship the steers and horses from here so Sheriff Thompson figured they would load at either the P. R. R. freight yards or at West Morrisville, where there are pens for loading cattle. They were found at the P. R. R. freight yards.

Warrants charging larceny were served on Dallas Connelly, San Antonio, Texas; Harry Marvin, Fort Worth, Texas, and Mrs. Bertha Hammer, wife of one of the owners of the circus.

Mrs. Hammer waived extradition and drove back to Trenton with a deputy sheriff in the car in which she was trying to escape. The two men refused to return and were lodged in the jail here later to be taken to the county jail at Doylestown.

The cattle and horses are being cared for and being held for the party having the attachment served on the outfit.

DENIES DAUGHTER MADE ATTEMPT AT SUICIDE

Father Says Lucille Layton
Took Iodine by Mistake

CONDITION NOT SERIOUS

Denial was made today by Fred Layton, colored, 908 Spring street, that his daughter, Lucille, 18, had attempted to take her life by drinking iodine.

Stories in circulation here last night were to the effect that the girl had swallowed iodine following a quarrel with her stepmother. This is not true, according to Mr. Layton, who said today that his daughter had gone to a closet last evening to get a remedy for neuralgia and in the dark had gotten the bottle containing iodine by mistake. Before discovering her error Lucille had taken the poison.

Her condition today is reported satisfactory and it is not expected that there will be any serious results.

Miss Layton was quite an athlete and won several medals at girls' week events here, a few years ago.

SCIENCE IS INTERESTING

One of the newer responsibilities placed upon the school teacher is the instruction of the pupil along general scientific lines that he may understand and appreciate the scientific news that appears in the newspaper. Even the elementary student finds scientific news interesting when it is written in terms so he or she can understand, which means that those who write scientific news for the press share this responsibility with the teachers.

It has been said in jest but with more than a particle of truth that now that the public is interested in the news of science all that remains is for the scientists to make their discoveries even faintly intelligible to the human mind.

Newspapers have created this new interest in science. For a number of years they have been covering the world of science as thoroughly and thrillingly as they cover the world of sport, politics and crime, with the inevitable result that their readers have developed an insatiable appetite for it. Thus has the press co-operated with the scientists in the enlightenment and education of mankind.

Let it be said for modern science that it makes good copy. What could make more exciting news copy than ascents into the stratosphere, descents to the ocean floor, the conquest of virulent diseases, the discovery of new chemical elements and the development of methods for making new materials out of such old products as paper and corn stalks?

HOW OLD IS THE EARTH?

Scientists are to make a new attempt to estimate more accurately the age of the earth.

The Carnegie Institution of Washington will work with the geological commission of Finland to measure the radio-activity of pre-Cambrian rock formations. The rocks of Finland have been chosen for this latest scientific quest because of all the rocks in the world their geologic age can be most closely estimated. Successive rock layers have been comparatively undisturbed in Finland.

Scientists believe that some day science will be able to determine the earth's age within 10,000,000 years or so. Lord Kelvin, one of the first scientists to make serious efforts to determine the birthday of Mother Earth, estimated that it occurred 27,000,000 years ago. Scientists now believe the earth to be much older.

The basis of estimate of the earth's age is the relatively simple calculation of the time needed to convert sedimentary sea deposits into stone, together with other scientific guesses of the rate of cooling of the earth's interior. Discovery of the fact that nearly all surface rocks contain minute quantities of radio-active elements has seriously upset the figures based on the measurable cooling of the earth. It is now known that some of the loss of heat comes from this radium content of the rocks and not from the hot core of the earth.

A chiropractor can't go to the beach to get away from it all.

The recent German election shows further substantial gains for the celluloid button industry.

MURDER of the NIGHT CLUB LADY

THE NEW THATCHER COLT DETECTIVE MYSTERY

BY ANTHONY ABBOT

SYNOPSIS

Lola Carewe, "The Night Club Lady", is mysteriously murdered in her penthouse apartment at three o'clock New Year's morning. An hour later, the body of Lola's guest, Christine Quires, is found in Lola's room. Christine had been killed first and her body hidden. Dr. Hugh Baldwin attributes both deaths due to heart failure. Guy Everett, Christine's New Year's Eve escort, claims he brought her home at 12:15 and then went riding, alone, on the Motor Parkway. Mrs. Carewe, Lola's mother, denies seeing Christine return. Police Commissioner Thatcher Colt discounts District Attorney Dougherty's theory that Lola was killed by a jewel thief ring she headed and that Christine met the same fate for knowing too much. Vincent Rowland, Lola's lawyer, discloses that Everett loved Lola and was jealous of Dr. Baldwin. The police are on the trail of Christine's brother, Edgar, who left his Rochester home for New York after receiving a telegram New Year's Eve. Christine was to have inherited wealth shortly. Dr. Multooler, the medical examiner, contradicts Dr. Baldwin's statement that heart failure caused the deaths. A strap picked up in Lola's room evidently caused the bruise on Christine's neck—after death. Everett confesses he lied about riding on the Motor Parkway. He states Christine told him she had discovered a plot to murder Lola and feared for her own life because of her knowledge, adding that Dr. Baldwin was involved. The picture of the young man found in Lola's room is identified by the Paris Prefect of Police as that of Basil Boucher, a young bank clerk, who met a dancer named Lola in Paris, robbed a bank to buy her a ruby, and then disappeared. Basil's parents sold medical laboratory specimens. Professor Luckner, a scientist, finds a scorpion's antenna—the instrument of death—among the particles of dust garnered from Lola's room. Colt is puzzled as there were no punctures visible on the bodies. Then Luckner calls Colt's attention to a speck of blood on the sleeve of Lola's robe which leads the Commissioner to surmise that Dr. Baldwin, when summoned to treat Lola, inserted his hypodermic needle into the puncture made in her arm by the scorpion. This belief is strengthened by the knowledge that Baldwin bought scorpions.

CHAPTER THIRTY

"LUCKNER is a queer old bird," the chief remarked. "Once he was offered a chair as professor of pathological anatomy at the University of Berlin. He turned it down because he did not like Berlin, and took a lesser job in Heidelberg. I think he is at heart a great detective but he will devote himself to criminal research only as a special favor to me. He has the gift for investigation and with all of the resources of science at his disposal, he could become one of our most valuable agents. Of course, he's old, but he could train his successor so that the work could go on when he grew too old or tired. But he will not hear of it. He regards detective work as degrading to a scientist. He says he is not interested in catching the criminal but he wants to understand the crime. But this time he has made, in an amazingly short period, a truly extraordinary discovery. Whoever is guilty must certainly consider himself beyond detection."

Again he relapsed into silence, as the car sped on through Central Park in a weaving diagonal route—a speedy one-way passage since Colt had put into effect the new traffic regulations. And then a vicious worming through the tangled traffic across Fifth Avenue and into the purlieus of the far East Side where, on the water-front, majestic modern apartment houses flourish today in uneasy democracy with slaughter-houses and tenements.

Within five minutes we stopped again before the door of that apartment house where mysterious death had overtaken two beautiful women—and where Doctor Baldwin had his office suite.

Across the street, in front of another apartment house, a man was standing in a chasseur's uniform of blue and gold, and with a visored cap. Instantly I recognized him as one of our best men from Headquarters, on duty trailing Dr. Baldwin. I knew, too, that his partner was not far away—probably watching the rear entrance. This was certain evidence that Doctor Baldwin had not yet returned to his home but was still in his office.

A patrolman in the lobby and another in the elevator saluted as the Commissioner and I entered and rode up to the second floor. We made our way down a narrow corridor until we came to a door on which was lettered the legend: "Hugh Baldwin, M.D. Office Hours 10 A.M. to 11:30 A.M., 2:30 P.M. to 4:00 P.M. Consultation by Appointment Only."

Colt turned the knob and opened the door. We found ourselves in an outer office where a business-like woman of about thirty years, a sexless creature with mouse-colored hair, sat at a desk, making out bills and addressing envelopes. She looked up inquiringly, then recognizing Colt's familiar features, she stood up in flushed confusion.

"Is Doctor Baldwin in the office?" asked Colt.

"Why, yes, Mr. Colt, I'll tell him right away that you are here."

She turned and was about to open a massive door behind her when suddenly the front door opened violently. A short and stout woman, spherical and plump, her face crimson and her blue eyes snapping angrily, rushed in and, ignoring Colt and myself, confronted the other woman.

"Is Hugh in there, Miss Simon?" demanded the newcomer, panting and excited.

"Why, yes, Mrs. Baldwin, he is, but these gentlemen—"

"These gentlemen can wait."

It was evident that Mrs. Baldwin was in a mental turmoil. A graceless and rather pitiful little figure, she strode quickly to the closed door and seized the knob. But the door did not yield. It was locked. With a glare in her eyes, Mrs. Baldwin turned toward the secretary.

"Is there a patient in there?"

"No!"

"Open this door," the wife commanded furiously.

"I have no key," replied Miss Simon, "I didn't know it was locked."

In a frenzy of anger, Mrs. Baldwin seized the knob of the door with both hands as if only more of her strength were needed to pull it free. She rattled it in a violent ecstasy of energy.

"Hugh," she screamed, "Open this door and let me in!"

There was no answer.

"Hugh!" she cried again. Still no answer. With a bewildered air, Mrs. Baldwin looked around at us for the first time.

"He doesn't answer," she said as if stating a miracle.

Colt's face was sombre and grave. His eyes gleamed with a newly awakened suspicion.

"Miss Simon," he asked quietly, "is there any way for Doctor Baldwin to have left his private office?"

"No—only through this entrance."

This answer decided Thatcher

Colt.

Thatcher Colt opened the door. On the floor lay Doctor Hugh Baldwin. He was dead—shockingly so!

One long searching glance Mrs. Baldwin cast upon the dead body of her husband. Then she collapsed. She dropped to the floor in a dumping heap, and lay very still, as if she herself were dead.

Excited as we were at our tragic discovery, Colt and I had to turn our backs momentarily upon the corpse of the physician while we struggled with the limp and heavy body of his widow.

We carried her to a couch in the reception office. Fortunately, Miss Simon, the reception clerk, was a self-composed young woman who could assist us without hysterics. She volunteered to resuscitate the unconscious Mrs. Baldwin while the Commissioner and I returned to the private office and closed ourselves in with the stark figure on the floor.

The appearance of that figure was ghastly to the point of the fantastic. Dr. Baldwin lay there as if in dreadful caricature of the unhappy women whom he had been unable to save, only a few hours before.

Like Lola Carewe and Christine Quires sprawled Doctor Baldwin. As their hands had been flung in twisted anguish above their heads, so Doctor Baldwin's mighty arms were turned up in a stiff attitude of mortal anguish. Lola had lain twisted at our feet, her body screwed almost into the semblance of a question mark. So twisted also was the long, strong body of this athletic physician. The unnatural curve of arms and legs, the distortion of the neck, the very pointing of his toes suggested one bizarre interrogation point.

But there was more to add to our discovery a confounding tinge of horror. On the strained face of Doctor Baldwin there glistened the familiar moist glow in death that also had stained the lovely face of Lola Carewe. There was the same bloating of the lips and the crimson spot of blood in the corners of the mouth. Here was a masculine replica of the deaths of Lola and Christine—the scorpion of Durango had struck again.

Kneeling beside the body, Colt listened at the doctor's heart.

"He is dead," the Commissioner told me with a melancholy glance.

His eyes, fixed gloomily on mine, asked questions I had no need to voice. Why and how had this man died? Had the instrument of death turned upon its master? Or had Baldwin been innocent of our suspicions? A third victim of unknown killers? Were we at the finish of our trail? Or on the threshold of a greater mystery?

"There is no hope," repeated Thatcher Colt, "but we should take no chances. There are two other doctors with offices on the first floor. Get one of them up here."

Five minutes later, I was back in the apartment with a dark, boyish-faced Jewish physician, Doctor Tannenbaum. He immediately pronounced his colleague dead, and expressed himself as amazed at the symptoms. At this, Colt glanced toward me. Here was Doctor Tannenbaum confronted with the same symptoms which Doctor Baldwin had seen the night before in Lola Carewe and Christine Quires. I remembered that Baldwin had promptly stated that Lola was a victim of heart trouble. But this Doctor Tannenbaum was instantly suspicious. In fact, he insisted that the police be notified and he flushed with astonishment upon learning that the tall dark-haired man before him, tanned and grave, was the Chief of Police.

"If I can help, Commissioner—"

"I shall be glad to call on you," Colt assured him, taking his hand and while shaking it, leading him suavely to the door.

OF course we say "never again" with qualifications, but the chances are that we're right. From all indications it appears as if building material costs have reached bottom and we firmly believe the same to be true of labor costs. With both costs at their lowest in 20 years now is the ideal time to remodel, repair or build . . . and save a sizeable amount.

EDDINGTON DOWNS THE NINE OF FERGUSONVILLE

EDDINGTON, Aug. 16.—Eddington handed Fergusonville a close defeat on the home diamond Sunday afternoon. Sam Creely, who hurled the full distance for the home team had two shoddy innings which gave the visitors all of their runs. In the seventh frame the visitors collected six markers to make the game more interesting and they had a chance for victory in the ninth but Creely came back out of his wildness and struck the last batter out while two of his mates were aboard the sacks.

Much discussion about the new ball rule was in evidence at the game and it took several innings to get the situation straight. Eddington showed good from at the plate and played good ball on the field. The team as it stands is coming along in fine form and will offer keen competition for its rivals.

Prospectors Build Own Cabins; Eat Game

In the first mile or so, they settle down to the jog-trot. If the trail is cut deep, with walls of snow on both sides, and the going is easy, the musher stands upon the runners and rides. At a hill he steps forward, takes the "Gee-pole," lets out the tow-line to make room for walking, grasps a "tump-line" gives the word and helps his dogs up the hill.

Should a snowstorm overtake before reaching the shelter cabin, or the dogs show evidence of softness, one halts where there are dead, dry trees and green trees for boughs, and proceeds to erect the tent.
First a spruce is felled, the large limbs removed and spread upon the snow. The bole is cut into four sections and load on the ends of the bough, which have the "feathers" extending toward the center. Then the finer boughs are cut and spread to a depth of several inches within the inclosure.

The ridge pole is now erected, either in the crotch of a tree or on two crossed poles, lashed together and placed at each end. The walls of the tent are drawn outward, the side log lifted to admit of its being used to weight down the walls, snow is piled along the sides and all air is excluded save where the front is parted.

Four stakes are driven into the snow in the corner where the sheet-iron stove will be placed. This is then erected, the telescope pipe thrust through the hole in the tent and everything is ready for a blizzard with 60 degrees below zero temperature. Inside the tent one would not suppose that their foundation was a bed of snow. A canvas thrown over the boughs and one has the impression of a carpeted domicile.

It is not necessary to make beds for the dogs. If they are pure-bred malamutes they will prefer to climb up from where they have a dry bed beneath a spreading spruce and sleep upon the snow, allowing themselves to become mounds of fleecy flakes until it becomes too hot!

There are grouse in the nearby spruce. Or, if just emerging from timberline onto the plateaus, there will be ptarmigan. The latter may be killed with a club or shot from a distance of a dozen feet.

Then there is a "draw" leading up through a valley, containing willows or birch. Here is where the moose yards up for the winter. As you cross this draw you observe an old moose track. This is the cue as to his whereabouts. If correct, he will be found with his harem and several yearlings or calves near a thick growth of birch or willows. Select and kill the animal, usually a young bull, return to camp, hook up the dogs, haul it in, dress it and swing it to a limb.

The loads are now relayed along at intervals of ten miles or more, piled upon spruce boughs upon the snow, covered with canvas and one returns to headquarters, tired, but with an appetite! A moose steak broiled over the coals, with strips of bacon crisping on top, or maybe a little butter spread on, a pot of coffee, potatoes, bread, jam or canned fruit, or stuffed ptarmigan, browned to a turn with tomato sauce—

Here is where the frontiersman feels real pity for the man wrinking his brow over a French menu wondering if it will be fillet of beef aux fines herbes, perhaps haricot verts or champignons, and winds up by dunking a French roll into the gravy and swearing that it is impossible to find anything fit to eat any more.

Then there is the wait once you have reached the creek where the presence of several grains of gold have intrigued you and inspired the curiosity you once experienced while hunting hen's nests in the hay mow.
By this time you are trotting miles behind the dogs and find your half-hundred years have been cast aside and you are again in those care-free days of golden youth.

There is the cabin to build. With axe and cross-cut saw, the prospector selects his timber, fells it, hitches the dogs to the sled, hauls it to a spot where a little creek trickles down the hill, erects his humble edifice, builds a bunk, rips out a few boards for table and door, cuts a hollow cotton-wood log to serve as a conduit, places one end in the creek and the other near the cabin, and shakes his fist at the man collecting water fees.

Next he stores up a supply of dry wood. If there is a coal seam nearby he hauls in a ton.
There will be a crust until the snow drops to about one foot in depth through thawing. This is taken advantage of to hook up the dogs and run over to another creek and say "hello" to his freeman neighbor, as certain if all is well, swap news and gossip and enjoy the romp of the dogs as they speed for home and a ration of dried salmon, or scraps of meat and tallow boiled into a rice or cornmeal gruel.

There are logs to be taken up to where the pit will be taken out; a ditch to be dug to divert the water so that one may take advantage of the creek bed in escaping ground-slucing off the overburden. Maybe you have been out the year previous and have saved your ashes. These are spread along the snow where the ditch will be dug. This expedite melting at that spot and an incipient runlet begins. This thaws the crust of alluvial, and once the water begins to cut it will eventually fructify into a ditch, needing only a little assistance with a shovel to work it to the proper dimensions.

It is growing warm and the remainder of the moose may spoil. The hide has been saved and is soaked to softness. A drawstring is threaded around the sides, to make a bag. It is then suspended beneath trees, the meat cut and placed in, after which it is covered with a strong brine.

(In his concluding article tomorrow, Mr. Lincke will list the equipment needed by the prospector with its cost.)

Big League Surprises

By HARDIN BURNLEY

AVERILL AND FERRELL—STARS OF THE CLEVELAND TEAM—THE INDIANS MADE A FINE LATE-SEASON SPURT AND HAVE BEEN DRAWING BIG CROWDS AT THEIR NEW BALL PARK!

FLOYD VAUGHAN—KID SHORTSTOP WHO HAS BEEN A BIG FACTOR IN THE PIRATES PENNANT RUSH!

THE pennant races in both leagues have produced many surprises this year, although of course it is the National League scramble that furnished the most astounding upsets.
In the junior circuit the Yankees and the Athletics were figured as the contenders, and it turned out that way, although for a time earlier in the race it seemed as if Connie Mack's famed machine was going completely to pieces. The Senators, also considered as pennant contenders in the pre-season predictions, failed to check as well as was expected, while the big surprise of the race was the brilliant spurt of the Cleveland Indians. For a time it seemed that Roger Peckinpaugh's tomahawking tribe might even overtake the league-leading Yankees, and one of the most notable features of the current baseball season was the tremendous crowd which witnessed the Cleveland-Philadelphia series which opened Cleveland's magnificent new ball park. The official attendance at the first game in the new Municipal Stadium was announced as 80,284, which exceeded the previous attendance mark set in New York four years ago, when 80,043 saw the Athletics battle the Yankees in a double-header at the Yankee Stadium.

The outstanding stars of the Cleveland team are undoubtedly Ferrell and Averill. Wesley Ferrell, wonderful moundsman, has been hailed as the best right-hander since the palmy days of good old Sir Walter Johnson. Ferrell has not the likeable personality of the old Washington ace, and many Cleveland fans seem to take a delight in booing Wesley when he works on the mound, actually treating him as if he were an enemy pitcher. Still, the only great fault that can be found with Ferrell is his desire to win. He is a cheery lad who never takes defeat with very good grace, and so the fans always have a swell time razzing him when he is losing. Wes wins most of the time, however, so he has plenty to be cocky about.
Averill is to the Indians' attack what Ferrell is to their defense. Earl is a truly great outfielder who has proved himself under fire, and should have a good many years of brilliant play in front of him.
In the National League race the big surprises were furnished by two Pennsylvania teams, the Pittsburgh Pirates and the Philadelphia Phillies. The Pirates, incidentally, possess in Floyd Vaughan a young shortstop who has been tabbed by expert observers as the best first-year man in the senior circuit this season. Vaughan was not seriously considered as a regular at any time before the season got under way; but once in the game he showed so much all-around skill that there was no getting him out of there. Of course, it remains to be seen whether Vaughan's fine playing is merely a temporary flash in the pan. Floyd had practically no major league experience before jumping into a regular berth with the Pirates; but at present it certainly looks as if he possess the genuine goods.
